The Health of Grandparents Raising Grandchildren: A Literature Review

Skipped-generation households are on the rise in several countries. Grandparents in the United States who are raising their grandchildren are at increased risk for depression and decreased physical and emotional well-being. Health care providers are called on to assess the health needs of this increasing population of caregivers.

Comparison of Family Satisfaction in Australian Ethno-Specific and Mainstream Aged Care Facilities

Meeting the care needs of older migrant adults with limited English language proficiency is challenging in residential care settings. Although ethno-specific facilities were preferred, family members' satisfaction increased when bilingual staff members were present in mainstream facilities.
