30 New drugs 2015, part 3

By Daniel A. Hussar, PhD

Learn about nine drugs recently approved by the FDA, including a drug for relapsing forms of multiple sclerosis, a combination product approved to treat certain serious intra-abdominal and urinary tract infections, and an I.V. drug indicated to treat acute uncomplicated seasonal influenza in adults.

46 Amyotrophic lateral sclerosis: What nurses need to know

By Tamara L. Bellomo, MSN, RN-BC, and Lucille Cichminski, MSN, RN

A rapidly progressive, fatal neuromuscular disease, ALS involves the degeneration and death of upper and lower motor neurons. After updating your knowledge about the diagnosis and treatment of ALS, help patients locate the resources they need to deal with this difficult diagnosis.

40 ISSUES IN NURSING

Defusing bigotry at the bedside

By Fidelindo A. Lim, DNP, RN, and Daniel Brian Borshi, BA

How should nurses respond when they become the targets of prejudice and bigotry from patients? Even in a patient-centered care environment, you have a right to a respectful and safe workplace. Join this thoughtful discussion about ways to confront bigotry and defuse potentially explosive situations.

53 A nurse's journey through living kidney donation

By Maria V. Vazquez, MSN, RN

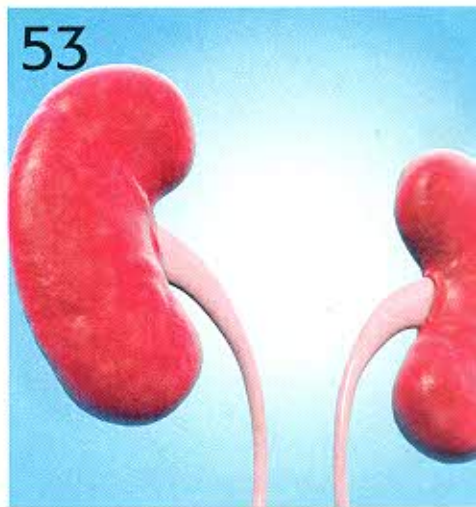

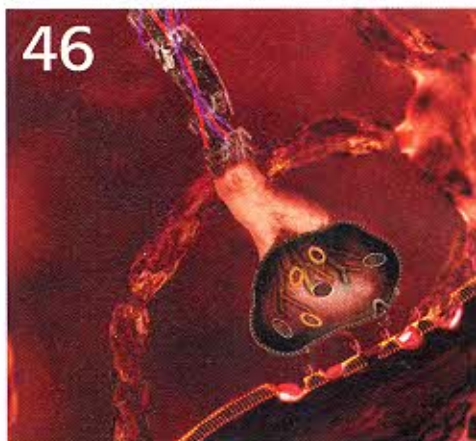

A nurse shares the lessons learned when she became a living kidney donor for her husband. By becoming more knowledgeable about the living organ donation process as presented here, you too can increase awareness of this unique opportunity to save lives.

60 SHARING

The other side of the stethoscope

By Kelley M. Courtney, BSN, RN

Being out of commission while recovering from foot surgery deepened this nurse's empathy, understanding, and compassion for her patients.
