CLINICAL EVALUATION & IMPROVEMENT

344 Use of Scheduled Nonopioid Analgesia to Decrease Inpatient Opioid Consumption After Scheduled Cesarean Birth

In this quality improvement project, use of a standardized nonopioid multimodal analgesia regimen was associated with decreased inpatient opioid consumption and lower pain scores after scheduled cesarean birth.

Patricia Indermuhle, Michele Zelko, Candy Mori & Sheau-Huey Chiu

353 Using the Pelvic Floor Impact Questionnaire to Improve Urinary Incontinence Assessments for Female Veterans

In this quality improvement project, using the PFIQ-7 tool to assess quality of life helped care providers develop individualized plans of the care for female veterans with urinary incontinence.

Shawna Adams, Nancy Cibulka & Eve Holzemer

363 Body Image, Depression Symptoms, and Health-Related Quality of Life in Black Women With Systemic Lupus Erythematosus

Depression and body image disturbance among Black women with systemic lupus erythematosus should be routinely assessed and addressed by nurses and other clinicians to help promote optimal quality of life.

Madeline M. Jones & Laura P. Kimble

IN PRACTICE

371 CNE Perinatal Care for Individuals With a History of Sexual Trauma

When nurses care for individuals with a history of sexual trauma, incorporating trauma-informed care can help prevent retraumatization and promote a healthy perinatal experience.

Samantha Sabola, Jung Kim & Cara Cuc Sheppard

379 Nursing Care of Childbearing Families After Previous Perinatal Loss

Nurses can use a mnemonic describing eight "A"s to guide them in caring for childbearing families who have experienced a previous perinatal loss.

Melanie Chichester, Lesley Tepner & Denise Côté-Arsenault

389 Early Interventions to Achieve Thermal Balance in Term Neonates

Through preventive measures, competent assessment, and early intervention, preventable admissions to the NICU for hypothermia can be averted.

Susan Bedwell & Barbara J. Holtzclaw

397 Understanding the Effects of Disordered Eating on Fertility and Fertility Outcomes

Early identification and treatment of individuals presenting with disordered eating behaviors and infertility can mitigate long-term negative reproductive outcomes and support future fertility.

Emily Grinstead & Eleanor Stevenson

REFLECTIONS

406 Breastfeeding Awakening

A nurse-midwife who experienced her own difficulties with breastfeeding writes that there should be fewer obstacles and more systematic support for lactating individuals.
